EXPERIENCE

Private International Law

Adrian Briggs has long combined practice at the Bar with being Professor (now Emeritus) of Private International Law at the University of Oxford. His practice is dominated by advisory work, especially on all aspects of private international law, but with particular emphasis on the law on jurisdiction and the enforcement of foreign judgments. He is frequently instructed to give expert evidence, in the context of proceedings before foreign courts on questions of English private international law, such as whether judgments or settlements in foreign proceedings would be regarded as conclusive in England, on whether causes of action pleaded before foreign courts could be asserted in English proceedings, on how English courts would interpret particular jurisdiction clauses, and so on.

His principal treatise is Civil Jurisdiction and Judgments, now in its seventh edition; the eighth edition, the definitive post-Brexit edition, will be published in 2025. His Private International Law in English Courts was first published by the Oxford University Press in 2014: it presented an account of the subject which reflected the then fact that most of the law was statutory and European, with the common law having been relegated to a residual, or marginalized to a peripheral, role, and that a book which explained the law as it was needed to be constructed with that in mind. The second edition, published in April 2023, undoes almost all the original work, and restates the law after the radical and undeniably messy separation from the European Union. He was for 15 years a member of the editorial team, working under (and learning much from) the General Editorship of Lord Collins of Mapesbury, of Dicey Morris & Collins, The Conflict of Laws, standing down after the publication of the 15th edition.

He also has a wide range of papers on all aspects of private international law, but especially civil jurisdiction and foreign judgments.
